Every skill creates a second chance.

LAYA Creative Hub Learning Center Inc. is a nonprofit innovation and learning institution that builds inclusive local economies through creative learning, circular economy innovation, entrepreneurship, and cooperative development. We transform skills, local resources, and environmental challenges into sustainable livelihoods and community opportunities.

About Us

Building Inclusive Local Economies Through Creativity and Circularity.

LAYA provides hands-on learning experiences that help individuals turn skills, local talents, and recoverable resources into meaningful economic opportunities. Through creative enterprise, circular economy solutions, and cooperative development, we help communities build stronger and more sustainable local economies.

About Visual

From Learning and Creativity to Livelihood and Lasting Change.

We turn practical skills, local talents, and recoverable resources into opportunities that help people, communities, and the environment thrive together.

Our Impact

Laya Creative Hub Achievements

Our Vision

Inclusive Communities Where Creativity Creates Opportunity and Lasting Change.

Our Mission

Laya Creative Hub Learning Center Inc. equips marginalized and underserved communities with practical skills and opportunities to create sustainable livelihoods, develop community enterprises, and build environmental and economic resilience.

Creative Enterprise Academy

Hands-on creative learning, skills development, and entrepreneurship training that prepare individuals for employment, enterprise, and sustainable livelihoods.

Laya Loop

A community circular economy platform that transforms plastic waste and recoverable resources into valuable products, green livelihoods, and inclusive economic opportunities.

Laya Loop: Circular Jewelry & Youth Leadership

Website page: <https://www.layacreativehub.com/programs/circular-economy/laya-loop/>

Circular Jewelry & Youth Leadership Program

From plastic recovery to creative learning and youth leadership, this Laya Loop feature turns environmental action into student creativity, entrepreneurship, and supervised peer mentorship.

Launch target

Oct 2026

The PDF positions this as a proposed school-based launch in Cardona.

Potential reach

600 learners

Grade 4 to Grade 6 learners across 15 sections in partner schools.

Youth mentor track

50 mentors

Grade 6 learners can join a focused jewelry and leadership mentor pathway.

Plastic goal

12 metric tons

A recovery target presented in the PDF as a program goal, not a condition for training.

Program overview

Why this program matters

The program connects environmental action with creative learning by transforming recovered PET plastic into recycled beads and student-made accessories.

It builds practical skills in jewelry design, entrepreneurship, leadership, and circular-economy awareness while creating a stronger link between school learning and Cardona's plastic recovery work.

The funding idea is also circular: recovered material value can help sustain training costs and reduce dependence on newly purchased materials.

Circular system

How Laya Loop works

01

Plastic bottle collection

Collected plastic becomes the starting point for recovery, material value, and training support.

02

Recovered plastic creates value

Recovered materials are sorted and processed so they can support creative production and lower material dependence.

03

Recycled beads replace virgin materials

Student projects use recycled bead materials instead of relying only on newly purchased art supplies.

04

Students learn and lead

Learners gain art, sustainability, entrepreneurship, and leadership skills through supervised workshops and peer learning.

Student pathway

Learning, mentorship, and creative output

The PDF describes both whole-class learning and a focused youth mentor track so learners can grow from creative practice into peer support and leadership.

Creative learning

- Creative jewelry and accessory design
- Circular economy and responsible consumption
- Plastic recovery and material value
- Reflection, sharing, and environmental stewardship

Youth mentor track

- 50 Grade 6 learners for a train-the-mentor pathway
- Jewelry making and recycled-bead product development
- Quality control and communication skills
- Peer mentoring under adult supervision

Expected outputs

- Student-made recycled-bead rosaries
- Jewelry prototypes and school showcases
- Peer-learning sessions completed
- Documented environmental, leadership, and financial results

Budget and sustainability

Circular financing model

The PDF frames the program as a model that helps finance itself through plastic recovery while covering training, logistics, tools, artist support, badges, documentation, and program management.

Estimated full program cost

342,000

As presented in the PDF financing section.

Five phases from planning to evaluation

Phase 1: Preparation

Approvals, school coordination, safety protocol, baseline work, and mentor selection.

Phase 2: Mentor training

Jewelry making, circular economy learning, leadership development, and competency assessment.

Phase 3: Recovery and processing

Collection, verification, processing, and commercial transfer of recovered plastic materials.

Phase 4 and 5: Student learning, showcase, and evaluation

Supervised Grade 4 to 6 sessions, student creations, impact reporting, financial reporting, and scale-up recommendations.

Safety and partnership

Safeguarding, shared roles, and community implementation

Learners are not expected to handle hazardous or contaminated waste. Sorting, washing, processing, and transport are handled through supervised and age-appropriate systems.

The PDF also outlines a tripartite partnership among Laya Creative Hub, MENRO or LGU partners, and DepEd Cardona to connect program implementation, environmental management, and school coordination.

Clear roles help reduce confusion, support accountability, and keep the circular program practical for schools and communities.
